EDITORIAL

Design needs dialogue – and new work needs good old interactions.

When we talk about the future of work with designers, architects, planners and users, one thing is always crystal clear: The future isn't somehow simply patiently waiting for us further down the line. The future is anytime, anywhere. And it is here and now.

We have developed our latest products precisely for the here and now. For a time when we are meeting in the office again to work together. Where the creativity that is so vital as the source of innovation in every company thrives.
